

This is the forest that has no name. Don't get me wrong I'm sure it had a name once upon a time but none now living remember it. This forest is quite an ordinary old forest. It has its little secrets, little nooks and crannies hidden in the shadows. And the creatures living in this forest? Well they are your everyday bears, deers, rats and things, and I suppose you might find an orc or a goblin or two, I have heard rumors of even a unicorn might have been seen wandering around in the sunshine. Oh and there is a little woodling. What are they you may ask. Well I'm not quite sure. They are these little creatures that live in the forest. They make things grow and look after the animals. They are like forest spirits but in a human-like form. They also have little magic of their own. They can heal animals that are injured and they can make a field of flowers sprout out of a field of dust. And when fire has gone through the forest and burned everything down the woodlings make new rise from the ashes. They guard the life of the forest and every living thing in it.

Gongala is the old wise woodling the little woodling meets at the beginning of the game. He has knowledge of the world that stems from his old age and his connection with the energy of the forest around him. He can sense the life force around him and the disturbances in it caused by the death of the sun. He knows that to get the sun burning again the sunstones need to be collected and burned in the heart of the forest. When they are burned they will activate an ancient spell to awaken the sun again.

Nu-Nu-Nuku is a woodling related to water. He takes care of the lakes, ponds and rivers, as well as the plants and creatures living in them.

Chiko-Chiko is a woodling related to trees. He watches over their growth and plants new ones when the fires burn them down.
